STOUGHTON, MASS.
"It's an ill wind that blows nowhere." And the Legislative "wind" of 1911 certainly blew from all directions. It was the most "strenuous" session in the memory of "the oldest inhabitant." All records were broken, both for number of days of session, for number of messages sent to the Legislature by the Governor, for vetoes over-ridden, and for the number of bills and resolves that became law by the signature of the Governor and without it; there was a period when messages and bills were signed, became law without executive approval, and were passed in spite of executive disapproval in a manner to satisfy the most radical discontent who was "again the government." For it was almost impossible to determine what was "government" in such chaos. However, "the end came peacefully" about 7 o'clock on the 28th of July, and the members departed homeward, "some to make hay and some to raise corn," and most of them to put their "fences" in order to "keep off the grass" all possible interlopers in the political pastures. Only the historian of some generation yet to come can ever do justice to the session of the Legislature of 1911. It wasn't even "damned with faint praise" by the daily and weekly press. And yet, when its work is carefully reviewed, it will be seen that it really accomplished a great deal for the public good. It was absolutely free of any suspicion of "graft." It passed such notable measures as bills for the consolidation of the Boston Elevated and West End street railway companies and a $9,000,000 appropriation to begin extensive improvements in Boston harbor, looking to making it the finest port in the country. It passed a bill for state-wide direct nominations. It created a commission to investigate the cold storage problem, and one to begin a plan for state homesteads for working people. It passed measures to curb and restrain "loan sharks" and to secure injured workmen much greater damages. It refused to modify the "bar and bottle bill." It passed the 54-hour bill. It raised the pay of judges 25 per cent., and that of succeeding legislators from $750 to $1000. Even at the last one can imagine that Governor Foss, when he consented to prorogue it, breathed softly, "With all thy faults I love thee still," for he straightway "set his cap" toward Miss Democracy for a second term. The Legislature of 1911 worked hard, got mad sometimes, did an immense amount of good work, as well as some not so good, and earned its pay more than any Legislature in history; and more than the usual number want to come back. May they all, whether they come back or not, "Live long and prosper!"

DORIC HALL.

This hall has seen varied gatherings, but none of greater interest than that of April 17, 1861. On that day, the first volunteer company of the whole country, during the late War of the Rebellion, assembled here, chose its officers, received overcoats from the government and in an hour and a half from the time of assembling was on its way to the front. The story, in more detail, is as follows: In Cambridge, in 1860, had been formed a company of "Wide Awakes" to help elect President Lincoln. Hon. J. M. S. Williams, congressman from that district, promised them that if they would keep up their organization they could go to Washington to see Lincoln inaugurated. But the United States government forbade the assembling of such bodies at the national capital. During the dark days of February, 1861, several of the company agreed to volunteer if they were needed, and, on the 14th of February, several of them signed an agreement to that effect. First on the list was the name of John Kinneer, now first clerk of Sergeant-at-Arms. In the first week in March, he, with a few others, visited the State House and personally tendered their services to Governor Andrew. He advised them that there was no immediate need of their services and that they return to Cambridge, whence he would summon them if necessary. Then came the news of the breaking out of rebellion. They at once visited the State House, finding Governor and Council in session. Governor Andrew told them to return to Cambridge and that they would receive orders in an hour. They returned and the orders speedily reached them. Then, again, they hastened to the State House, many of their members leaving their work and throwing their tools into the street. Reaching the State House, they assembled in Doric Hall, ninety-seven of them. In a small adjoining room they chose officers, electing James Prentiss Richardson, now of Texas, as captain. They first went to the Old Colony station, but were soon ordered to the "S. R. Spaulding," where they embarked for Fortress Monroe. They were first assigned to the Fifth regiment, but were soon transferred to the Third, becoming Company C. This was, with out doubt, the first volunteer company of the Rebellion. It is a matter of history that this prompt, loyal and general reasonee of this company, in contrast with the scattering returns from more pretentious organizations, did much to encourage the State authorities and "the great war Governor."

In this hall lay in state the body of Charles Sumner, Sunday, March 15, 1874, where it was viewed by a multitude as vast as time would allow.

In this hall gathered the "Army of the Unemployed," February 20, 1894, whence they were removed by detachments of the district and Boston police, but without violence. They had just been addressed on the Capitol steps by Governor Greenhalge.

This view is taken from the main entrance and shows the statues of Washington and John A. Andrew in the distance.

THE OLD SOUTH MEETING-HOUSE

Built in 1730, on the lot of Gov. John Winthrop, corner of Milk and Washington streets, and dedicated in April of the same year. On November 27, 1773, here was held the meeting at which it was resolved that the English tea should not be landed; and on December 16 here was held the meeting, with 7,000 people attending, before the pouring of the tea into Boston harbor by the Sons of Liberty, disguised as Mohawk Indians. Here Warren spoke in March, 1775, three months before he was killed at the battle of Bunker Hill. In the siege of Boston it was used as a riding-school by the British. Its external appearance has not been changed for 150 years. No religious services have been held here since 1872. Now occupied by a loan collection of Revolutionary and other relics, the admission fees going to the preservation fund.
"Tom" Meagher, the Veteran of the War of the Rebellion, who has been the popular "Candy Man" of the Legislature for, lo, these many years.
As one of the foremost "Legislators" of Massachusetts (for he was once a member of the Massachusetts House), it is eminently proper to place here, close beside the "Old State House," this rare but peculiarly interesting picture of Daniel Webster beneath his favorite tree at his New Hampshire home.
THE OLD STATE HOUSE

Built in 1748, on site of burned town hall, at the head of State Street, Boston. In the foreground occurred the Boston Massacre of March 5, 1770. Been used as State House, City Hall, and Post Office, British troops quartered here, 1768, and General Gage held council of war here before battle of Bunker Hill. Declaration of Independence read from balcony in view; from other end Washington reviewed procession in 1789. Here State Constitution planned and ratified. William Lloyd Garrison took refuge here from mob, October, 1835, it being then used for City Hall.
BIOGRAPHICAL

BRIEF SKETCHES OF THE LIVES OF THE MEN WHO, IN STATE GOVERNMENT, HELPED TO SHAPE LEGISLATION IN 1911.
