Abstract: This codex manuscript by Plymouth colonist William Bradford documents the life and travels of the Pilgrims from 1608-1647. It was during this time in which they departed England for the Netherlands, organized themselves as a company to settle in America, and weathered several decades of life in North America.

SCOPE AND CONTENT

William Bradford began writing the journal ten years after the arrival of the Pilgrims in Massachusetts in 1620. He recounts the congregation’s travels from England to the Netherlands, their preparations to sail to North America, the ocean voyage, the establishment of Plymouth Colony and then the history of the colony, in great detail, to 1646. The journal documents the Colony itself – passengers on the Mayflower, births and deaths, encounters with the original inhabitants of Massachusetts, and both business and theological conflicts within the colony.

The following items accompany the manuscript:

- A decree from the Consistory Court of the Diocese of London documenting the conditions of the transferal of the Bradford Manuscript (or "The Log of the Mayflower") to the Governor of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, dated April 12, 1897
- A newspaper clipping from "The Times" (London) describing the failed efforts to modify one of the conditions outlined in the decree, and the formal presentation of the "log" from the Bishop of London to Mr. Bayard, American ambassador to England, dated April 30, 1897
- Copy of a document signed by Thomas Francis Bayard asserting his intention to fulfill the conditions of the decree by depositing the "log of the Mayflower" with the Governor of Massachusetts, dated April 29, 1897
- The brown paper wrapper in which the volume travelled from England in 1897

Most likely these items traveled with the Bradford manuscript from London to the State House, and for this reason they have been added to the collection. The folder also contained an acidic envelope (discarded) with the note: "Log of Mayflower belongs in leather case." Also: a letter dated January 18, 1898 from Governor Wolcott to Caleb B. Tillinghast, State Librarian.

BIOGRAPHICAL/HISTORICAL NOTE

The manuscript’s author, William Bradford, was born in England at Austerfield, Yorkshire in 1590, his father a yeoman farmer and his mother the daughter of the village shopkeeper. In his mid teens Bradford joined a newly-formed Congregational church. This group of religious dissidents believed it was necessary to separate from the Church of England. Fearing persecution in England, Bradford and others of these "separatists" moved to Amsterdam, and then Leyden in 1607/1608. There Bradford followed the trade of weaver, he married, learned Dutch, Latin, and Hebrew, and acquired a sizable library. When the congregation decided to emigrate, Bradford helped arrange the trip across the Atlantic Ocean in 1620.

Bradford was married twice, first to Dorothy May, in Amsterdam. She fell from the deck of the Mayflower into the waters of Cape Cod harbor, where the ship was anchored, and drowned. This was while her husband was with others on an expedition ashore. They had left behind one son in England. In Plymouth, he married the widow Alice (Carpenter) Southworth, who brought two children to the marriage. Alice and William Bradford had three children.

At the age of 31 Bradford was elected the second governor of Plymouth Colony; he remained a principal leader of the colony until his death in 1657.

After Bradford’s death the journal remained in the hands of his family and then in the collections of historians and clergymen, including the pastor of Old South Church in Boston, Thomas Prince, who had been writing a history of the early years of the Plymouth Settlement. Prince died before the volume could be returned to Bradford’s great-grandson, who had loaned it to Prince early in the century (as early as 1726). It disappeared from Old South Church in 1775, during the British occupation of the city. It is likely that British soldiers took the volume, as it reappeared in the mid-nineteenth century in the library of the Bishop of London, where a historian from Massachusetts discovered it in 1855. After a long campaign on the part of prominent persons in Massachusetts and the United States, the volume finally returned to Massachusetts in 1897. The State Library has kept it secure since then.

Conditions Governing Access

Doyle), or one of the many transcribed and versions. For the safety and security of the original volume, access is granted under very limited circumstances.
