HOUSE No. 2118

The Constitution of Pennsylvania

In the Year the Fourth Year of the Independence of the United States

It is hereby declared that the Constitution of Pennsylvania is the fundamental law of the State, and that all laws made in conformity therewith are valid, and all laws made in violation thereof are void. It is further declared that the rights of the people are secured by the Constitution, and that no person shall be deprived of his property without just compensation. It is also declared that the power of the State is vested in the people, who are the fountain-head of all authority, and that the government is instituted for their benefit and protection.
