THE CONSTITUTIONALITY OF SUFFRAGE

In the Year 1850

The first of the amendments to the Constitution of the United States, which relates to the right of suffrage, is the subject of this treatise. It is a subject of great importance, and one which has attracted the attention of the public mind for many years.

The object of this treatise is to show that the right of suffrage is a right which is secured to every citizen of the United States by the Constitution, and that it is not subject to any restriction or qualification.
