PREFACE.

As has been noted by the editor of these Souvenirs, each session has some unusual feature to distinguish it from every other. That of 1900 certainly rounded out the century as, in many respects, the most remarkable Legislature that for many years sat beneath the gilded dome. It began with a peculiarly “strenuous” contest over the Speakership of the House. To the credit of the contestants be it said that the result was accepted with a good grace, and the unsuccessful competitors of the winner became his able and efficient supporters on the floor. Death early claimed a member, and within the first four months of the session two other members passed away. These were Messrs. Rivers of Milton, Wright of Fitchburg and Keyou of Medford. There were two unusual investigations, a state board in each case being the object of attack. Their results, as shown by legislative action, did not justify the time and expense of the investigations. There was also an investigation of the allegation by the newspapers of improper influences attending the passage of a certain bill, but the committee’s report completely exonerated the members from any suspicion. But the unusual feature of the whole session, and that which drew out its length beyond that of all its predecessors, with a single exception, was the contest over the lease of the Fitchburg rail, road to the Boston & Maine and that of the Boston & Albany to the New York Central. These subjects occupied the attention of the railroad committee until June 8 and they were not entirely disposed of until July 17. But in spite of the unusual and laborious nature of the session, the members voted down the proposition to allow themselves additional compensation and the close of the century was reached with the dignity and decorum that characterizes the fitting representation of the law making power of the original and typical “commonwealth.” The legislators of 1900 can certainly claim distinction of membership in a body marked by enough events out of the ordinary to make it a notable “One in a Hundred” of similar bodies of the old Bay State. Each Souvenir has some peculiar and unusual feature, and that of this year’s is the copy, on page 127, of the very rare painting of Daniel Webster under his favorite tree at his home in Marshfield, after he had retired from active participation in public life.

DORIC HALL.

This hall has seen varied gatherings, but none of greater interest than that of April 17, 1861. On that day, the first volunteer company of the whole country during the late War of the Rebellion, assembled here, chose its officers, received overcoats from the government and in an hour and a half from the time of assembling was on its way to the front. The story, in more detail, is as follows: In Cambridge, in 1860, had been formed a company of "Wide Awakes" to help elect President Lincoln. Hon. J. M. S. Williams, congressman from that district, promised them that if they would keep up their organization they could go to Washington to see Lincoln inaugurated. But the United States government forbade the assembling of such bodies at the national capital. During the dark days of February, 1861, several of the company agreed to volunteer if they were needed, and, on the 14th of February, several of them signed an agreement to that effect. First on the list was the name of John Kinnear, now assistant doorkeeper of the House. In the first week in March, he, with a few others, visited the State House and personally tendered their services to Governor Andrew. He advised them that there was no immediate need of their services and that they return to Cambridge, whence he would summon them if necessary. Then came the news of the breaking out of rebellion. They at once visited the State House, finding Governor and Council in session. Governor Andrew told them to return to Cambridge and that they would receive orders in an hour. They returned and the orders speedily reached them. Then, again, they hastened to the State House, many of their members leaving their work and throwing their tools into the street. Reaching the State House, they assembled in Doric Hall, ninety-seven of them. In a small adjoining room they chose officers, electing James Prentice Richardson, now of Texas, as captain. They first went to the Old Colony station, but were soon ordered to the "S. R. Spaulding," where they embarked for Fortress Monroe. They were first assigned to the Fifth regiment, but were soon transferred to the Third, becoming Company C. This was, without doubt, the first volunteer company of the Rebellion. It is a matter of history that this prompt, loyal and general response of this company, in contrast with the scattering returns from more pretentious organizations, did much to encourage the State authorities and "the great war Governor."

In this hall lay, in state, the body of Charles Sumner, Sunday, March 15, 1874, where it was viewed by a multitude as vast as time would allow.

In this hall gathered the "Army of the Unemployed," February 20, 1894, whence they were removed by detachments of the district and Boston police, but without violence. They had just been addressed on the Capitol steps by Governor Greenhalge.

This view is taken from the main entrance and shows the statues of Washington and John A. Andrew in the distance.

MEMORIAL HALL.

The Battle Flags of the various Regiments that served in the Civil War are here gathered in niches enclosed with glass. In other niches are bronze and marble statues of Governors who were more or less directly connected, by being in office during those years, with the building of the present State House. The Hall itself is surrounded with huge monoliths of Sienna marble, while the gallery is of the same material, the whole making what is said to be the most costly Hall of its kind in the country.

THE OLD SOUTH MEETING-HOUSE.

Built in 1730, on the lot of Gov. John Winthrop, corner of Milk and Washington streets, and dedicated in April of the same year. On November 27, 1773, here was held the meeting at which it was resolved that the English tea should not be landed; and on December 16 here was held the meeting, with 7,000 people attending, before the pouring of the tea into Boston harbor by the Sons of Liberty, disguised as Mohawk Indians. Here Warren spoke in March, 1775, three months before he was killed at the battle of Bunker Hill. In the siege of Boston it was used as a riding-school by the British. Its external appearance has not been changed for 150 years. No religious services have been held here since 1872. Now occupied by a loan collection of Revolutionary and other relics, the admission fees going to the preservation fund.
THE OLD ELM, BOSTON COMMON.

(The following inscriptions on the tablets adjoining the present young and thrifty elm briefly state the main facts of interest):

"THE OLD ELM destroyed by a gale Feb. 15, 1876. This elm planted A.D. 1876."

"THE OLD ELM.—This tree has been standing here for an unknown period. It is believed to have existed before the settlement of Boston, being fully grown in 1722; exhibited marks of old age in 1792, and was nearly destroyed by a storm in 1832. Protected by an enclosure in 1854. J. V. C. SMITH, Mayor."
FANEUIL HALL, DOCK SQUARE.

Built in 1763; dedicated, March 14, and completed the same month, on the site of an earlier one built in 1742 and burned on Jan. 13, 1761. Enlarged in 1805 to its present proportions. Rebuilt largely in 1899. The upper hall is the armory of the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company. Called also "The Cradle of Liberty."
As one of the foremost "Legislators" of Massachusetts, it is eminently proper to place here, close beside the "Old State House," this rare but peculiarly interesting picture of Daniel Webster beneath his favorite tree at his home in Marshfield.
Built in 1748, on site of burned town hall, at the head of State Street, Boston.

In the foreground occurred the Boston Massacre of March 5, 1770. Been used as State House City Hall, and Post Office. British troops quartered here, 1768, and General Gage held council of war here before battle of Bunker Hill. Declaration of Independence read from balcony in view; from other end Washington reviewed procession in 1789. Here State Constitution planned and ratified. William Lloyd Garrison took refuge here from mob, October, 1835, it being then used for City Hall.

Representative Nicholas B. Keyou of Medford died, March 10, and Representatives Twombly, Ames, Dean of Wakefield. Pearce, Blood, Coolidge, Litchfield, Walsh, Hubbard, Paton and Love were appointed to prepare resolutions and attend the funeral.

Representative Edward J. Donovan, having been elected city clerk of Boston, resigned his position as member, Feb. 15. Mr. Joseph P. Lomasney was sworn in, March 28, as his successor.
On March 23, Hon. John D. Long, United States Secretary of the Navy, and Speaker of the House in 1876-7-8, visited the House. Speaker Myers made the Secretary “Speaker” again, pro tem., and the latter addressed the members to their great delight and appreciation.

Senators Washburn, Luscombe and Patch of Middlesex and Representatives Ames, Stone of Springfield, Brown of Weston, Crosby of Arlington, Fletcher, Wetherell and McNary were appointed with the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House, to represent the Legislature at the 125th anniversary of the opening of the Revolutionary War, celebrated by the town of Concord, April 19.

On April 27, Gov. Nash of Ohio and Representative Smith of Mich. visited the Senate and House, being “received” by each branch, while in the House both guests made brief addresses.

On Jan. 19, Capt. Walker of the gunboat “Concord” was presented to the senators during a recess.

H. Wessels, chairman of the Volkraad of the Orange Free State and J. N. de Bruyn, secretary of the envoys. The latter briefly addressed the House.

On June 1, the Senate passed resolutions commending President McKinley for his offer to mediate in the South African war; later the House concurred.

The President and Speaker and Senators Parry, Joy and Tague and Representatives Keith of Cambridge, Saunders, White, Chadwick, O’Brien, Roads, Crosby of Arlington and McCarthy were a special committee to attend the 125th anniversary exercises in Cambridge, July 3, of Washington’s taking command of the Continental Army.

The criticism by the press of the vote on the Westminster Chambers bill caused much feeling among the Representatives and a number made personal explanations. A subsequent investigation by the committee on rules exonerated all members from having been influenced by improper means, and showed that the insinuations of the press were unfounded.

Rear Admiral Sampson and Congressman McCall were visitors of the House, May 24, and were presented to the members.

At the close of the session, the Senate presented President Smith with a beautiful bronze "Venus of Milo," Clerk Coolidge with a pair of field glasses, and Door-keeper Remington with a travelling bag. In the House, the members presented Speaker Myers with a costly hall clock, Clerk Kimball with a beautiful mantel clock and Chaplain Waldron with silver candelabra.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

In the arrangement of the illustrations in "A Legislative Souvenir," the State officers, the Executive Council and officers of the Senate and House are followed by the joint legislative committees arranged alphabetically, and these groups are separated by miscellaneous pictures that have more or less relation to our State government. They include views of all the principal halls and corridors of the Capitol, views from the cupola of the same, the offices of the various state departments, etc., the whole making a collection valuable historically and intrinsically, as well as because, in some cases, the views are the only ones of the kind that have been or can be obtained.
