PREFACE.

The rule that there is a special feature in every Legislature still holds good. This year it was the proposed construction of a new system of subways in Boston. Held back by the committee on Metropolitan Affairs, by reason of its importance until a late day in the session; passed by both houses by overwhelming majorities and finally vetoed by the Governor, it may mark the last attempt of any similar corporation in Massachusetts to obtain by legislative enactment a long franchise of the practical monopoly of a public service. "High water mark" of such leases was doubtless reached in the Boston & Albany and Fitchburg railroad leases of 1900; and Twentieth Century legislation was signalized in its opening year by the refusal of the Governor in the interests of the people, to sanction a bill that tied up for forty years the tremendous monopoly of transportation of Boston and its suburbs. Aside from this measure, there was little out of the ordinary proposed in the way of legislation. While there was more business brought before the Legislature than ever before, yet it was mostly of the nature of remedial and corrective legislation adapted to the rapid development of the State's material interests, rather than of a constructive and radical nature. Experience teaches those foremost in legislation, that the greatest good is accomplished by vigorous prosecution of work in committee, with reports presented as soon as possible after hearings are completed, rather than by hasty work in committee and long debates on the floor. The session was not saddened by the loss of any member by death. The redistricting of the state into Congressional districts was again made necessary under the Constitution by the rapid growth of the state in population, and a bill was agreed upon that was, as a whole, as acceptable to both parties as could have been expected or desired. Unlike Legislatures for the previous score of years, this one was prorogued to return on the second Wednesday in November, in order to pass upon the new arrangement of the Public Statutes. A special feature of the Souvenir of 1901 is the new map of the new Congressional districts, and the picture of the special committee that so divided the state. It is worthy of note that the "Legislative Souvenir," now in its tenth volume, has become more appreciated each year, and that the orders for it are larger this year than ever before.

DORIC HALL.

This hall has seen varied gatherings, but none of greater interest than that of April 17, 1861. On that day, the first volunteer company of the whole country, during the late War of the Rebellion, assembled here, chose its officers, received overcoats from the government and in an hour and a half from the time of assembling was on its way to the front. The story, in more detail, is as follows: In Cambridge, in 1860, had been formed a company of "Wide Awakes" to help elect President Lincoln. Hon. J. M. S. Williams, congressman from that district, promised them that if they would keep up their organization they could go to Washington to see Lincoln inaugurated. But the United States government forbade the assembling of such bodies at the national capital. During the dark days of February, 1861, several of the company agreed to volunteer if they were needed, and, on the 14th of February, several of them signed an agreement to that effect. First on the list was the name of John Kinnear now first clerk of Sergeant-at-Arms. In the first week in March, he, with a few others, visited the State House and personally tendered their services to Governor Andrew. He advised them that there was no immediate need of their services and that they return to Cambridge, whence he would summon them if necessary. Then came the news of the breaking out of rebellion. They at once visited the State House, finding Governor and Council in session. Governor Andrew told them to return to Cambridge and that they would receive orders in an hour. They returned and the orders speedily reached them. Then, again, they hastened to the State House, many of their members leaving their work and throwing their tools into the street. Reaching the State House, they assembled in Doric Hall, ninety-seven of them. In a small adjoining room they chose officers, electing James Prentice Richardson, now of Texas, as captain. They first went to the Old Colony station, but were soon ordered to the "S. R. Spaulding," where they embarked for Fortress Monroe. They were first assigned to the Fifth regiment, but were soon transferred to the Third, becoming Company C. This was, without doubt, the first volunteer company of the Rebellion. It is a matter of history that this prompt, loyal and general response of this company, in contrast with the scattering returns from more pretentious organizations, did much to encourage the State authorities and "the great war Governor."

In this hall lay, in state, the body of Charles Sumner, Sunday, March 15, 1874, where it was viewed by a multitude as vast as time would allow.

In this hall gathered the "Army of the Unemployed," February 20, 1894, whence they were removed by detachments of the district and Boston police, but without violence. They had just been addressed on the Capitol steps by Governor Greenhalge.

This view is taken from the main entrance and shows the statues of Washington and John A. Andrew in the distance.

The Battle Flags of the various Regiments that served in the Civil War are here gathered in niches enclosed with glass. In other niches are bronze and marble statues of Governors who were more or less directly connected, by being in office during those years, with the building of the present State House. The Hall itself is surrounded with huge monoliths of Sienna marble, while the gallery is of the same material, the whole making what is said to be the most costly Hall of its kind in the country.

THE OLD SOUTH MEETING-HOUSE.

Built in 1730, on the lot of Gov. John Winthrop, corner of Milk and Washington streets, and dedicated in April of the same year. On November 27, 1773, here was held the meeting at which it was resolved that the English tea should not be landed; and on December 16 here was held the meeting, with 7,000 people attending, before the pouring of the tea into Boston harbor by the Sons of Liberty, disguised as Mohawk Indians. Here Warren spoke in March, 1775, three months before he was killed at the battle of Bunker Hill. In the siege of Boston it was used as a riding-school by the British. Its external appearance has not been changed for 150 years. No religious services have been held here since 1872. Now occupied by a loan collection of Revolutionary and other relics, the admission fees going to the preservation fund.
THE OLD ELM, BOSTON COMMON.

(The following inscriptions on the tablets adjoining the present young and thrifty elm briefly state the main facts of interest):

"THE OLD ELM destroyed by a gale Feb. 15, 1876. This elm planted A.D. 1876."

"THE OLD ELM—This tree has been standing here for an unknown period. It is believed to have existed before the settlement of Boston, being fully grown in 1722; exhibited marks of old age in 1792, and was nearly destroyed by a storm in 1832. Protected by an enclosure in 1854. J. V. C. Smith, Mayor."
FANEUIL HALL, DOCK SQUARE.

Built in 1763; dedicated, March 14, and completed the same month, on the site of an earlier one built in 1742 and burned on Jan. 13, 1761. Enlarged in 1805 to its present proportions. Rebuilt largely in 1899. The upper hall is the armory of the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company. Called also "The Cradle of Liberty."
As one of the foremost "Legislators" of Massachusetts, it is eminently proper to place here, close beside the "Old State House," this rare but peculiarly interesting picture of Daniel Webster beneath his favorite tree at his home in Marshfield.

THE OLD STATE HOUSE.

Built in 1748, on site of burned town hall, at the head of State Street, Boston.

In the foreground occurred the Boston Massacre of March 5, 1770. Been used as State House City Hall, and Post Office. British troops quartered here, 1768, and General Gage held council of war here before battle of Bunker Hill. Declaration of Independence read from balcony in view; from other end Washington reviewed procession in 1789. Here State Constitution planned and ratified. William Lloyd Garrison took refuge here from mob, October, 1835, it being then used for City Hall.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

In the arrangement of the illustrations in "A Legislative Souvenir" the State officers, the Executive Council and officers of the Senate and House are followed by the joint legislative committees, arranged alphabetically, and these groups are separated and followed by miscellaneous pictures that have more or less relation to our State government. They include views of all the principal halls and corridors of the Capitol, views from its cupola, of the various state departments, the whole making a collection valuable historically and intrinsically, as well as because in some cases the views are the only ones of the kind that have been or can be obtained.
