1904
Half-tones of Groups from the Union Engraving Company, No. 338 Washington Street, Boston.

Half-tones of Portraits and Interiors from Elmer Chickering, the "Royal Photographer", 21 West Street, Boston, Mass.

JAMES OTIS IN DEFENCE OF THE PEOPLE.

This painting represents James Otis arguing before the Superior Court of Massachusetts in February, 1761, in the Council Chamber of the Old Town House in Boston against the "Writs of Assistance." The painter of this picture was Robert Reid. The painting is eight feet by ten and is on the north wall of the "Marble Staircase." (Half tone from photograph by N. L. Rush, No. 551 Massachusetts Ave., Boston.)
PREFACE.

In presenting this Souvenir for the "thirteenth" time to the members of the Legislature, its Editor has no superstition of accompanying ill luck. On the contrary, its thirteenth appearance promises to be the most successful of any. As the very first number of this series was inspired by the "Souvenir" fad accompanying the great World's Exposition at Chicago in 1893, so this number is accompanied by another World's Exposition, that of the Louisiana Purchase, in St. Louis. In another place will be found a picture of the Massachusetts State Building therein and the names of the Board of Managers from this state. The state will also be represented at the Exposition on Massachusetts Day, Sept. 17, by the Governor and appropriate committees of the Council and Senate and House. A special feature of the session, although not directly connected with it, was the dedication of the statue of Maj. Gen. William F. Bartlett in the Hall of The Flags, on May 27. This was in direct charge of the Governor and Council. In comparison with other sessions there have been fewer incidents of interest than usual. There was not even an "investigation," a fact almost without precedent. There were many vetoes, as in 1903, and all but one were clearly sustained, while as to the other there is difference of opinion, and the question may go to the Supreme Court for a decision. With fewer matters to act upon and with steady work upon its task set before it, the work was accomplished in some three weeks less time than usual, and the Blue Book was smaller than for a decade. There was a death of one member of the House, Mr. Blaney of Lynn, on March 21. During the session the "Parker muskets" of Revolutionary fame were removed from the old Senate chamber to the present one, in accordance with the terms of their gift to the state, Jan. 22, 1861. I take special pleasure in including a copy in colors of the famous "James Otis" painting in the Grand Stairway hall, not only as a novelty in this Souvenir but as a satisfactory representation of the original. To all my subscribers I therefore offer this Souvenir with the certainty that it will afford them much pleasure and satisfaction, not only in the immediate present, but more especially when the passing years widen the gap between the Now and the Then.

Yours truly,

A. M. BRIDGMAN.

HALL OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.
DORIC HALL.

This hall has seen varied gatherings, but none of greater interest than that of April 17, 1861. On that day, the first volunteer company of the whole country, during the late War of the Rebellion, assembled here, chose its officers, received overcoats from the government and in an hour and a half from the time of assembling was on its way to the front. The story, in more detail, is as follows: In Cambridge, in 1860, had been formed a company of "Wide Awakes" to help elect President Lincoln. Hon. J. M. S. Williams, congressman from that district, promised them that if they would keep up their organization they could go to Washington to see Lincoln inaugurated. But the United States government forbade the assembling of such bodies at the national capital. During the dark days of February, 1861, several of the company agreed to volunteer if they were needed, and, on the 14th of February, several of them signed an agreement to that effect. First on the list was the name of John Kinneer, now first clerk of Sergeant-at-Arms. In the first week in March, he, with a few others, visited the State House and personally tendered their services to Governor Andrew. He advised them that there was no immediate need of their services and that they return to Cambridge, whence he would summon them if necessary. Then came the news of the breaking out of rebellion. They at once visited the State House, finding Governor and Council in session. Governor Andrew told them to return to Cambridge and that they would receive orders in an hour. They returned and the orders speedily reached them. Then, again, they hastened to the State House, many of their members leaving their work and throwing their tools into the street. Reaching the State House, they assembled in Doric Hall, ninety-seven of them. In a small adjoining room they chose officers, electing James Prentice Richardson, now of Texas, as captain. They first went to the Old Colony station, but were soon ordered to the "S. R. Spaulding," where they embarked for Fortress Monroe. They were first assigned to the Fifth regiment, but were soon transferred to the Third, becoming Company C. This was, with out doubt, the first volunteer company of the Rebellion. It is a matter of history that this prompt, loyal and general response of this company, in contrast with the scattering returns from more pretentious organizations, did much to encourage the State authorities and "the great war Governor."

In this hall lay in state the body of Charles Sumner, Sunday, March 15, 1874, where it was viewed by a multitude as vast as time would allow.

In this hall gathered the "Army of the Unemployed," February 20, 1894, whence they were removed by detachments of the district and Boston police, but without violence. They had just been addressed on the Capitol steps by Governor Greenhalge.

This view is taken from the main entrance and shows the statues of Washington and John A. Andrew in the distance.

MEMORIAL HALL.

The Battle Flags of the various Regiments that served in the Civil War are here gathered in niches enclosed with glass. In other niches are bronze and marble statues of Governors who were more or less directly connected with the building of the present State House. The Hall itself is surrounded with huge monoliths of Sienna marble, while the gallery is of the same material, the whole making what is said to be the most costly Hall of its kind in the country.

THE OLD SOUTH MEETING-HOUSE.

Built in 1730, on the lot of Gov. John Winthrop, corner of Milk and Washington streets, and dedicated in April of the same year. On November 27, 1773, here was held the meeting at which it was resolved that the English tea should not be landed; and on December 16 here was held the meeting, with 7,000 people attending, before the pouring of the tea into Boston harbor by the Sons of Liberty, disguised as Mohawk Indians. Here Warren spoke in March, 1775, three months before he was killed at the battle of Bunker Hill. In the siege of Boston it was used as a riding-school by the British. Its external appearance has not been changed for 150 years. No religious services have been held here since 1872. Now occupied by a loan collection of Revolutionary and other relics, the admission fees going to the preservation fund.

(118)
DANIEL WEBSTER.

As one of the foremost, "Legislators" of Massachusetts (for he was once a member of the Massachusetts Senate) it is eminently proper to place here, close beside the "Old State House," this rare but peculiarly interesting picture of Daniel Webster beneath his favorite tree at his New Hampshire home.

(119)
THE OLD STATE HOUSE.

Built in 1748, on site of burned town hall, at the head of State Street, Boston.

In the foreground occurred the Boston Massacre of March 5, 1770. Been used as State House, City Hall, and Post Office. British troops quartered here, 1768, and General Gage held council of war here before battle of Bunker Hill. Declaration of Independence read from balcony in view; from other end Washington reviewed procession in 1789. Here State Constitution planned and ratified. William Lloyd Garrison took refuge here from mob, October, 1835, it being then used for City Hall.
